

Problem Statement

Colleges are too broad with their final bill and should/need to explain (in depth) the numbers and reasoning behind the prices

Details

While the final bill for colleges has names for different parts of the bill and the prices, there should be an in depth overview and explanation for the reasoning and functions behind every price.

Who is experiencing the problem

→ Students or parents who pay for education may or may not be overpaying for certain functions and parts of the bill required by a university or college.

Why does it matter

→ It matters because with every purchase most people make their reason for the purchase and want to know the details behind the purchase and why they are purchasing it. It seems as if in college, once the final bill is presented, some fees and sections of the bill are futile and appear as a simple money grab. With this part in a human's life, you literally can't afford to buy things you don't necessarily need and you want to save every penny, so at the least, the bill should be more detailed and provide explanations for every section.
